To Whom It May Concern:

The following document is a permissions form written for the EServer by our legal counsel, in order to ensure that we can publish works to Internet readers without excessive fear of lawsuits. The form basically assures that you hold copyright on the work you send to us (or know it to be in the public domain), and that you give us permission to distribute it to Internet readers. The permission is nonexclusive, and revocable at any time.

The EServer has always (since its inception) promised not to charge readers for access to the works we publish, and this contract ensures we will never do so in the future. The EServer is maintained entirely by a cooperative of volunteer members, who make works available online because we feel that they contribute to our society. This form just means we see the Internet as fertile ground for 'test cases' about intellectual property law, and we'd very much like to avoid becoming a test case found in law textbooks ourselves. :)

When submitting a work to the EServer for us to consider for publication online, please print two copies of the enclosed form, fill in the appropriate blanks, and sign and date both copies on the bottom left side of page three. Before we make the text available online, we'll sign both copies as well, keep one copy for our records, and mail one copy to you for your records.

Mail the form to:
